

Finally, Atlas returns and Hercules is very happy to see him. Atlas has got the three golden apples. “I can take these apples to King Eurytheus now,” Atlas says. “Wait for me here.”

But Hercules isn't stupid. “Atlas wants to escape and leave the world on my shoulders forever,” he thinks. “I must stop him.”

“That's a good idea, Atlas,” he says. “I don't want to see King Eurytheus. But, before you go, please teach me the best way to hold the world. You're big and strong and I can learn a lot from you.”

leave

להשאיר / يترك

Atlas is happy to hear this. He's happy to teach Hercules the best way to hold the world. He takes the world from Hercules and puts it on his shoulders.

“You see, Hercules, there's a correct way and an incorrect way to do this,” says Atlas. “I can teach you how to stand very comfortably with the world on your shoulders.”

Now watch me, Hercules!

Atlas explains how to hold the world. He talks a lot. He doesn't see Hercules take the golden apples and escape. Now Hercules is free and Atlas must hold the world on his shoulders forever.

correct

נכונה / صحيحة

incorrect

לא נכונה / غير صحيحة

comfortably

בנוחות / بشكل مريح